

Difference for life

The Australian College of Applied Psychology combines theory and practice to offer vocational, undergraduate and postgraduate qualifications in counselling, case management, coaching, people management and human resources.

Flexibility to study on-campus, by flexible delivery (distance education or online) or in a mix of modes, in small classes that allow you to get to know your fellow students and your educators.

Get experience while you study (depending on the course you undertake) through your student placement – meaning you get experience on your CV, before you graduate.

Oral language for deaf

Established in 1968, Taralye (a not-for-profit organisation) is a leader in the development of services for deaf children aged from birth to six years throughout Victoria. An internationally recognised early childhood centre, Taralye works in partnership with families, other service providers and the community to improve the linguistic, educational and social outcomes of deaf children by promoting innovative early childhood intervention services, research and advocacy.

Taralye provides a family-centred approach to encourage the development of oral speech and language skills through listening. Services include individual support, an audiology and ENT clinic and a range of inclusive group programs for children.

Head start at UWA

A UWA student has impressed the judges of a high impact publication prize by getting into print so early in her PhD.

Dani Barrington began her PhD in March last year, submitting a paper to Environmental Science and Technology in June.

"Traditionally students publish in the second half of their candidature, or even after completion," said staff-member Dr Michael Azariadis. "Dani had published so early, and in a high impact journal which is most impressive."

"It's good for me because I get feedback from each article I write," Barrington said. "If I keep publishing, it will mean I will already have written a lot of my thesis."

Studying at ACAP has made me feel so fantastic about my choice of career – I can't wait to get out there!
